FAMOUS WESTERN
DRAMA AT PORTLAND

An unusually important theatrical offering is to be staged at Baker theatre in Portland by the Alcazar Players for the week starting February 18. It is Belasco's "The Girl of the Golden West," a superb scenic production and thrilling dramatic triumph that is worth anyone's while, who, contemplating a trip to the metropolis in the near future, should try to so time it that he or she can be there during the week the play is on. New Cork City is said to be almost entirely supported in the amusement line by visitors from out of town, and no doubt many of the patrons in Portland's theatres are also from the surrounding cities. Especially is this true regarding the dramatic houses. We can see all the important movies right here in our own city, but the big dramatic hits make a trip to the metropolis necessary, and as for "The Girl of the Golden West" it is sure worth a trip there and back for the sole purpose alone of witnessing one of the foremost plays of the decade staged by a company of this standing.

"The Old Homestead," which played there last week, is reported to have literally "stood them up at every performance, hence it would doubtless be advisable to write for seats before taking a trip to the city to see "The Girl of the Golden West," which is another equally important success.

The play deals with life in California during the golden days, and its fame has spread to every home in the United States. The story could not possibly be even sketched in a few words, but it concerns the "girl" who keeps a saloon and dance hall in a mining town and who, despite her surroundings is sweet and innocent, guarded from all harm by Frank Keenan, now a famous motion picture star) are the three principals in the romantic story. Scenically it is the marvel of the modern stage. It will be seen at the Baker (Portland) all week commencing Sunday matinee, February 18, with matinees Wednesday and Saturday.
